Gatmore Pensions Summary (GPS) April 2018

MARKET COMMENTARY

After two months of heightened volatility and market weakness, some normality was restored in April as equity markets recovered slightly. Trade tensions seemed to ease between the US and its major trading partners and the heightened geo-political tension on the Korean peninsula of six months ago all but disappeared, both improving investor sentiment.

Towards the end of the month some weaker data points took the shine off the strong global growth story. Europe and the UK in particular saw a slowdown in economic activity and inflation fell more than expected in the UK. Investors moved from being 'certain' of a Bank of England rate rise in May to pushing it out to the end of the year at best, causing sterling to weaken significantly, which in turn boosted UK equities.

In the US, President Trump met with the Eurozone's most powerful leaders, Macron and Merkel, but little common ground was found on trade, climate change, or Iran. Later in the month it was reported that the US was ready to pull out of the Iran nuclear deal, which may cause further geo-political tension.

Gatemore Pensions Summary (GPS)

April 2018

GPS VIEWPOINT

Absolute return – is it really?

Just as investors had become used to the perennial rise in equity markets, the last three months have reminded everyone that what goes up can come down. Equities fell 3.7% in February and 2.3% in March before staging a comeback in April (up 1.9%), and market volatility has risen from the lows of 2017 to the highest level since 2015. In pensions world, after years of focusing on bonds and matching, growth investing has come back into vogue, with a focus on absolute rather than relative return.

Over the last few years, as equity markets roared ahead, investors holding diversified portfolios have underperformed the broader equity market. Trustees and advisers have lost sight of the importance of diversification in an environment when passive equities were outpacing most asset classes. However, as volatility has come back and looks set to stick around, those with diversified portfolios that deliver absolute returns should start to feel much happier. But a word of caution: not all funds which claim to be diversified are truly so; some are only in name and remain highly correlated to equities. It is down to trustees and their advisers to separate those who are able to preserve capital in difficult environments from the imposters.
